Moore Stephens helps local needy groups

2 Investment firm Moore Stephens Financial Advisers has joined a Northamptonshire initiative that supports the country's most vulnerable people.

Moore Stephens, which has offices in Corby and Northampton, has become the newest member of the Northamptonshire 100 scheme, a group that brings together 100 local businesses to help needy community groups and individuals living within the area.

Since its launch last summer, the firms that form Northamptonshire 100 have donated a collective £40,000 to worthy projects.

'We have been keen to give back to the community we serve for some time and this seemed the perfect fit,' said Jon Telford, managing director of Moore Stephens. 'By becoming a Northamptonshire 100 member we are able to help local people and grassroots community groups. Joining together with other groups has the bonus of ensuring our giving will have maximum impact.'

4 Fairbairn Private Bank has entered into a one-year sponsorship deal with the Stock Exchange Cricket Club (Secc).

Secc was established in 1950 and brings together City cricket lovers who work for a member firm of the London Stock Exchange. Fund managers, brokers and those working in corporate finance get together to play in around 10 cricket fixtures every year.

'We wish the Secc every success for the season ahead,' said Fairbairn's head of business development David Stern (pictured). He added that the Isle of Man private bank decided to support Secc to benefit the sport while boosting its own profile in the UK.
